Pastor Green's Daily Encouragement

Boy, these night games are killers, I almost forgot to wake up today. I pray that you are well rested, especially if you watched the game last night. In the past few years if you stayed up to watch a Bills game there were two reasons to be sad, one was the missed sleep, and the other was the last minute loss. It doesn't hurt as much when the Bills win as they did yesterday. Win or lose, they're still our home team, and we've supported them in thick and thin. We treat "our team" like our Father in Heaven treats us . . . no matter what we do, no matter how poorly we perform, He still loves us, He still provides for us. If you don't believe that then just look at the calendar today, we are only ten days away from Christmas Eve when we celebrate God sending His Son Jesus to Earth to live a perfect life, then die for the sins that we committed. Christmas is the celebration of the beginning of that perfect life that was given for all the world. That's why we say Merry Christmas and not happy holidays, God didn't offer up His Son for a holiday, goodness, Groundhog Day is considered a holiday in some places. I'm a little late in getting my post out today, but I'm right on time, and maybe a little early in wishing you a very Merry Christmas. Search in your heart today for that "Peace on Earth and Good Will toward men." I selected a song for today from Mercy Me, it should wake us all up today. The name is "Hold on Christmas."
