

January 7, 2021

Pastor Green's Daily Encouragement

There are so many words and so many emotions today, that I don't know where to begin. The hope of this one nation under God took a serious blow yesterday. I thought that I was watching news of protesters in some third world country, not in Washington, DC. I also have fears that this is far from being over, that the political climate in the US is going to keep eroding the dream that our forefathers had in 1776. I never dreamed that I would live to see the day that we had in our nation's capitol yesterday. Have we had enough "peaceful protesting" yet? It's time instead to fall to our knees in humble submission to our Creator Father and ask Him to heal this land. To raise up the leaders who will do the right thing, who will make the correct decisions, and who will give praise and honor and glory to God first and foremost. Can you identify that person or those people in Washington or Albany? Good luck with that. As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord, and until more of us do, things will only get worse. It's time to pray for the future of this country, for our elected representatives, and for each other. Only God can fix the mess that humans created, please call upon Him today to do just that. I've departed a little from my normal Contemporary Christian song for this Thursday and instead replaced it with an Elvis Presley song that was in my head when I woke up this morning. The name of that song is "If I Can Dream." Peace and joy and the love of Christ to you and yours today. Amen.