

January 11, 2021

Pastor Green's Daily Encouragement

We're back at it this morning. Another work week, another Monday, another shot at getting it right. As much as we might not enjoy Mondays, it's important to remember that we've only got so many of them remaining, so let's make the best of them. Today is one that we can describe as yeah, but no. Yeah, I've made it to early Social Security retirement age, but no, that isn't good because at this age, I'm running out of birthdays. We just never know what the future holds. We've all lost friends and family while they were very young, so what we do with our time is important. It's always a good idea to spend our time in prayer, in praise, and in worship. It's important to do for others as we would have them do onto to us. Everyone of us have been called by our Creator to be a blessing to others as we ourselves have been blessed. Today is a great day to start serving others. Every day is a perfect time to lift others up in whatever way they need. We have what is needed to deliver those blessings, and we should never wait for someone else to do it first. It might only be a call to pray for someone, and if it is, then pray without ceasing. Whatever you've been called to do, do it with all your heart, all your soul, and all your strength. On this Marvelous Monday I pray for all you, and your families. Be lifted up in the knowledge that God is hearing all of your prayers too. Our song to open this work week is an old spiritual that most of you probably haven't heard in decades. Sung by Tennessee Ernie Ford, here is "Sixteen Tons." Listen to the lyrics, you'll understand why I picked it today. God bless all of you.