Good morning folks, I pray that you are all healthy and happy this Friday morn. If you are, take a moment to give Him thanks for that. If you're not, then go to Him also to ask for His assistance to get you there. I'm going to write about one more group of entitled people today, and unfortunately they don't come in one size or age group. I'm talking about those who show no respect to anyone in a service industry who are working serving others in some manner, such as waiters and waitresses. The word entitlement really jumps into full gear in restaurants, and people should be forced to watch videos of their behavior there. While I can't speak to the parenting of these folks, I can suggest that most people were taught basic manners. You might even remember the magic words, please and thank you. Those words are missing in many conversations between customers and wait staff. We dine in restaurants frequently, and many of these great workers have become friends over the years to where I've officiated some of their weddings and have baptized their children, they deserve better treatment from customers. If you can't remember the magic words when you leave the house, then you should really stay home until you can remember. Rudeness has no place in an educated society. Once again, we were not created by a loving God to treat others poorly. And one more thought about this, if you can't leave a proper tip, then eat at home. These people have been working exceptionally hard during the pandemic, and they should be fairly compensated. Withholding proper gratuities is the same as violating the Commandment that says "Thou shalt not steal." Let us all make a commitment today to treat others as they should be treated, and let us start today. Our fantastic Friday song is the first Contemporary Christian song that I ever liked, and it is sung by BJ Thomas. Here is "You Gave Me Love." Be good today.
