G'day everyone, great to meet you here on this secular Saturday. I decided to sleep in a little this morning, and I see that a few of you got your posts up before me today. Later today you'll be thinking that you should have slept a little longer too. Last night as our confirmation students at St. Paul were being publicly questioned about what they've learned over the past two years, I was thinking about questions that I plan to ask God someday, such as "Why does everything that tastes good always bad for us." I was thinking about why Snickers bars and Reese's cups are bad for us yet broccoli is good. I'd like to know why Jesus is waiting to return, when clearly all of the signs that prepare us for His return are already occurring. I'm looking forward to His return because I can't picture how this world will look when He arrives and changes everything back to where it was at Creation. No more evil in the world, no more war, no more death, no more pain. How does a world like that sound to you? Sounds perfect to me. I pray that the remainder of your day would be almost perfect too, and it only happens with Jesus at your side. Don't leave home without Him.

Our secular Saturday song doesn't make it all the way back to the 50's and 60's, but it did come out in 1984, and it's a good one. I wouldn't play it here if it wasn't. Here is REO Speedwagon performing "Can't Fight This Feeling" Have a super Saturday.
