Looks like a spooky movie set outside this morning. The fog is pretty thick in my neighborhood. Fog has always seemed a bit eerie to me, and I guess that's why it's so captivating to see. I'm not going anywhere for awhile so I'm not concerned about driving in it, but please be careful if you're going out before the sun cooks it away. I'm not going anywhere but two of my three "best boys ever" are coming over this morning. We haven't seen them, except in pictures in about three weeks as we were gone, then they traveled to Cape Cod after that. I'm pretty certain that the first thing that they'll do when they arrive is fight Papa. I'll be bruised later, and I wouldn't change a thing. God has blessed me with many things, but Jesus is the only blessing that rises above the blessings of my family. When I travel, Jesus comes with me. When I'm home, Jesus is with me. And He is with you as well. Learn to recognize Him in your life, and see all that He does for you. Before the boys arrive this morning, Jesus was already here. So I pray that you would have a wonderful, fantastic Friday in the name of the Lord. Our song for the end of this work week is called "The Center of it All" by Mac Powell. Jesus is the center of it all, the reason for every season.
