

August 24, 2021

Good morning everyone, thank you for reading this post today. I'm always surprised and grateful that you look in on me once in a while. It is Tuesday, and I don't know where this new day is heading just yet, but I don't think that tacos will be a part of it. More sleep may be an option, or perhaps an afternoon nap. I don't understand why my grandsons are always so hesitant to take a nap, I think that they are a gift from God. Like I frequently say, if it's good, then it's a gift from God, and clearly, naps are a good thing. Of course if I were still somewhere between the ages of 4 and 9, then I would have all of the energy in the world like they do, and wouldn't need to rest like this old guy does. They prove it every time they are with me, and they're like Energizer bunnies, and they keep going and going. I wish that there were a way to bottle and sell that energy, we would no longer have a need for oil, wind turbines, solar farms, or nuclear power. Do you see what we just did, it's not even 5:00 AM and we've already solved the problem with energy consumption. No more fossil fuels, or anything that could harm us. God is so good to us, and these children and grandchildren are perfect proof of that. When you get settled this morning, send up some prayers, and thank Him for every thing, including your families, and for your ability to nap today. Remember, we belong to Him. It's going to be a hot one, so find yourself some air conditioned space and rest. Have a terrific Tuesday in the peace of Jesus. Our song for this day is titled "Remind Me Who I Am" by Jason Gray. Have a Jesus filled day.