

September 4, 2021

Here we go, cranking up a new day, and not just any day, but Saturday. Kinda more of the same for me today, a baseball game this morning (Theo) and a wedding this afternoon. It looks like it's going to be a fun wedding today. Life is always better when you can make it fun, and I try to make everything that way. Do I always succeed, no, but I try. I have a few hours until the game so I may go back to bed for a bit, then wake up more refreshed. I'm happy that I'm not Jesus, He frequently didn't have time to rest. People were constantly seeking Him for healing and other things. It didn't matter where He hid, the people found him, and He ministered to them, exhausted beyond description. We are so blessed to still have that Savior and Healer in our lives, as He never sleeps, and He is always as close to us as a whispered prayer. Yes, once again, what a Friend we have in Jesus. Did you wake up today with something on your mind that is weighing you down, then take it to the Lord. Is there pain anywhere, take it to the Lord. Whatever is troubling you can best be taken care of by Jesus, so don't spend one more minute dragging it around, give it to Him. It is secular Saturday, and I'm reaching back to about 1969 to bring you a song that I have always loved. Here is the Left Banke performing "Walk Away Renee." Have a super Saturday in the name of the Lord.
