

September 45 2021

A Blessed Sunday to everyone. I pray that you are well, and well rested. I am neither today. My back began causing a lot of pain on Friday, and it's been getting progressively worse over the weekend. This is happening because my chiropractor won't be in the office on Monday due to Labor Day. Oh well, I'll just have to get over it and wait until Wednesday. I do hope that I can find a way to sleep before then. No matter, I'll be in church this morning. It may hurt but the pain is lessened when I'm in God's house. I felt bad enough yesterday morning that I sat and watched a documentary on the sinking of the Titanic. It gave me the idea for today's hymn, which will be "Nearer My God to Thee." It seems as though the ship's band continued playing right up until it became obvious that they would not survive. At that point, the band began to play "Nearer My God to Thee." It didn't take much longer for all of them to meet God. Here is Rosemary Siemens singing this time honored classic.