Happy Labor Day to everyone, especially those who do have to work today, thank you. For everyone else, i pray that you have a very enjoyable day off. Thank you also for your prayers of healing for the back pain that I'm suffering this weekend, they worked. The pain has not gone, but I was able to sleep well last night, which is the reason that I'm just getting this posted at almost 6:00 AM. I've been dealing with this problem for almost twenty years but things were much worse these past few days. Now I'm praying that my chiropractor, Dr. David Pacana will be back in the office on Wednesday. He has been a wonderful blessing to me over the years, and has kept me moving. If you are ever in need of a good chiropractor, he's the guy to see. We had several middle and high school students from St. Paul show up to go swimming at the house last night. It was a little bit cool once the sun started to set, but they didn't seem to mind. It was nice to see the pool being used by so many people. Prayerfully, the weather will improve this morning and we'll see family, including all three of our turkeys for what Theo is calling his end of Summer picnic. If you have plans today, I pray that God would bless them with peace and safety. If your plans include hanging around the house and relaxing, then I pray that He would bless that as well. Have yourselves a marvelous Monday in the love and joy of the Lord. Our song for this Labor Day is called "Speak to the Mountains" by Chris McClarney.
