Hello my friends, welcome to another Terrific Tuesday and the first day back to school for most children. Some of them, like my grandsons will be happy to be back, others less so. Some parents will not be happy about school beginning, while others will be doing handstands and turning cartwheels. Please remember to lift these children to the Lord in prayer to keep them safe. While watching a local weather report last week I learned something that I had never heard before. It seems that the first day of September annually marks the meteorological first day of Autumn, and it lasts until November 30. I don't need to remind you what comes after that. I'm praying for a gentle Fall and easy Winter, please join me in that. God has shed His grace on us, and He has delivered a super Summer, and I am grateful for that, but now we look to the next season of the year, and the next season of life. Don't take one step into that future without Jesus walking with you. God bless you today, and all days in the name of the Lord. Our song for this day is slightly different than what we've heard over the months here. It is said that Rick Springfield wrote and recorded this song early in his career to illustrate how he prayed every night, especially for his father who had been hospitalized. So here is Rick Springfield singing "Speak to the Sky.
