That was some thunderstorm that blew through here last night. After hearing small claps of thunder getting closer, I was almost thrown out of my chair by one massive blast that was very close by.

That one got my attention. Prayerfully that doesn't continue into our Wednesday. It is Western Wednesday, and no other musical genre captured the feelings of America after 9/11 quite like Country music. As this Saturday is the twentieth anniversary of one of the most horrible days in our nation's history, I'm going to begin playing songs about the attacks today, and they will end on Saturday. Twenty years ago Country radio stations stopped what they were doing and played the National Anthem at noon . . . and it continues to this day. We are called to love our neighbors and to forgive those who harm us, but we should never forget the sacrifices of those who gave their lives attempting to help others, the police officers and fire fighters who ran into those infernos as everyone else was running out. We should never forget nor ever let our guard down to avoid suffering in this way again. And we should all be aware that there are still those out there who are planning and conspiring against us even as we speak. This is why we can never turn our eyes away from the Cross of Christ. To allow Him to lead and guide us back to being the Christian nation that we once were, and could be again. The words "God Bless America" are not just a popular greeting, they are words for all Americans to pray for, that our God would bless us, after we repent and return to Him. Our first 9/11 song is by Darryl Worley and it is called "Have You Forgotten." God bless every one of you, in the name of Jesus.
