

September 10, 2021

Peaceful morning to everyone, I hope that your sleep was restful and refreshing. We've successfully made it to another Friday, and to the tenth day of September already. Time is flying by pretty fast. It would seem that the older I get, the faster the days pass. It probably works the same or similar for you and your lives too. Just remember to take each day as it arrives and make the best of it. Do what you can, and don't fret about things you ran out of time to do. Prioritize your time to get done the most important things first, then move on from there, but never forget to add your prayers into the day. Make God an important part of your every day. He gave this day to us, never forget all that we have that comes from Him. Tomorrow is the twentieth anniversary of 9/11, and I'm continuing to play songs that were inspired by that tragic day in 2001. These songs show the feelings of many Americans at that time, and today's song is no different. It's a song with two different names, one is "Courtesy of the Red, White, and Blue." The next is "The Angry American." It doesn't matter which you use, this illustrated the feelings of millions of Americans on and after 9/11. Here is Toby Keith singing his controversial anthem. Stay well friends.
