

September 12, 2021

Good morning everyone. Today is no longer September 11, yet the memories of that day twenty years earlier are still as fresh and vivid as they were then. Never forget what occurred that day, in the attacks, and in the response to them. That was a perfect example of why we should always respect the members of our military, our firefighters and law enforcement personnel. When some moron starts talking about "defunding" police departments, then ask yourself, Who will come charging into a horrible situation to help me, or my family? Allow the lessons of so many years ago be a light to our paths today. Stand for our flag. Keep giving your own blood as well, someone in our community always has a need. And in every situation that arises in your life, make certain that God is with you, don't leave home without Him. As our Patriot's Day weekend comes to an end, be thankful for those who protect you every day of the year, whether they be serving in your city, town, or village, or somewhere on the opposite side of the world. And ask God to protect them. On a lighter note, I'm feeling a little older today. I guess that's what happens when your oldest child turns 42. Happy Birthday Ernie. Love you. Have a super Sunday, and go Bills. Our Song to end this weekend is "God Bless the USA" by Lee Greenwood.
