I'm trying to remember a thunderstorm that continued for many hours, but I can't think of one like last night's. It didn't seem real violent, but it was relentless, it just wouldn't quit. For reasons I can't explain, I've always slept better during a thunderstorm. No, it doesn't make any sense to me either, but many things in life don't make a lot of sense to me. For instance, why do people who hate the heat of Summer go south in the Winter? Why does your computer always work the slowest when in you're in a hurry? Why does everyone decide to eat at the same restaurant that you're planning to go to, and they arrive two minutes earlier. There are many strange questions in my head at 4:30 AM. The best one is why does Jesus still love us when we don't obey all that He has asked of us? It is solely because He died to give us life, and He forgives us when we repent. Our salvation is never based upon our actions, it is based only upon the death of Jesus on the Cross. There is nothing that He cannot and will not do to bring us home to His Father's Kingdom. He is the miracle that we all need in our lives, follow Him and never look back. Our song for this tremendous Tuesday is titled "Didn't I walk on the Water" by Joseph Larson. Enjoy!
