

Saturday, September 25, 2021

Almost another extremely late post today as my internet was down when I got up. Just as I was about to try to send it out with my phone, the internet returned, so here we are. Another Saturday morning with the possibility of a baseball game and a soccer match. If the baseball field is able to be played on, and I seriously doubt it, I'll be attending that this week as it is Theo's last game for the season, while Graham still has a couple of soccer matches left. We took Max to school yesterday morning and after we dropped him off, I was commenting on the blessings that God has given us. And He doesn't stop, they just keep coming and coming. We had prayed for a granddaughter once upon a time, but I am more than happy with the three little turkeys that He gave us. Before you get too busy today, stop and begin a list of all of the blessings in your life. I'm pretty certain that it will take you some time, if you are able to complete it, as His blessings just keep coming. Look for them all over today. It is secular Saturday, and our song is from a band from the 1960's who should be in the Rock Hall of Fame, but they have been forgotten. Here is Gary Puckett & the Union Gap singing "Woman, Woman." Have a super Saturday. Peace!