Morning Y'all. We've hit the mid-way point of the first week in October, and all I can say is Yee-ha. If country music is your thing, then Western Wednesday is your day. I've got a great song lined up for us today, you'll hear it soon. Here's a hint, I picked it deliberately, it was no accident. We are going to have a great day, at least by meteorological standards, and I pray that every other part is similar. Start your day praying for forgiveness, praying for thanksgiving, praying for others. There are a great number of people who can use our prayers today, and they are in need of God's goodness and grace. They require God's healing and peace. We can ask for these things on their behalf, and we should begin our day doing just that. We should end our day doing the same, and while we're at it, utilize the middle parts for the same reasons. God hears all of our prayers, but there is no reason to stop praying, give everything to Him and He will handle it for us. When you're up and fully functional today, search your heart for those who have need of prayer. Seek the hurting and the lost and offer your requests to God's throne of grace. Someone may be doing the same for you right now. Our song for this Western Wednesday, as promised, is called "Keeper of the Stars" by Tracy Byrd. Listen and enjoy today. God's love to everyone.
