It's a foggy morning outside. Looks like a Stephen King movie. There's something intriguing about fog, it's not going to harm anything or anyone, as long as people go slow and pay good attention on the roads. Other than that, it will burn off before too long, and we just might be left with a beautiful day after that. We also may be subject to a rainy morning, and we'll know for sure once the fog lifts. Maybe that's what is so intriguing about fog, it hides the truth of the coming day, and what it hides may be a good thing . . . or not. This is the exact reason that I place my faith, and trust, and hope in the Lord, He never hides anything. What He promises is what we get, good, and not so good. When we obey Him, there is always more good. His is the name that is above all names. Where are you placing your trust today? If it's not in the Lord, then you're not moving in a good direction. Follow Him and He will lead you to a destiny where there will be no more pain, or anguish, or fear, He will bring you home, to His glorious home. Our song for this Thursday is "Blessed Be Your Name" by Matt Redman. Have a swell day, in His saving name.
