Happy weekend to you. It's a super Saturday at 3:30 AM and the rain just picked up again. It bounces off of the aluminum awning outside my kitchen window and really magnifies the sound. The night has been similar to yesterday with intermittent showers, some very heavy. Looks like our Saturday will be the same. No matter what the day brings, God will be right here with us as He always is. What shall I fear . . . nothing! I'm praying that the most difficult thing about today will be choosing a secular Saturday song. I've got many to choose from, and I'm trying to narrow it down. One of the things that I enjoy about putting these posts up is attaching music that I enjoy. I haven't used a song that I haven't liked. Some people have sent me song suggestions, and they may be good songs for them, but I don't care for them. As long as I'm the one getting up in the middle of the night to share these posts, I'll continue to use my favorites. It's hard to make a mistake when it's secular Saturday, as everything is on the table, well, everything except rap or hip hop, you'll never hear them here. God has given so many people the wonderful ability to write and sing great music, and even though I wasn't one of them, I still have a love for it, and I know what I like. Having that in mind, one of the TV shows I loved in the 1980's was Miami Vice. In one of the first episodes, this song by Phil Collins was playing, and it became a favorite of mine mainly due to the perfect placement of the song in the show. Here is "In the Air Tonight." Have a peaceful, stress free Saturday. God bless.
