Welcome to a mostly moist Monday. Looks like an entire week of rain, again. We have really had our share of rain this year, but it sure beats the drought that many others are experiencing across the United States. This is still God's country in Western New York. We may get an abundance of rain, but it eventually subsides. We may get a ton of snow dumped on us, but it melts eventually. And once everything melts and subsides, our homes are right where we left them. And not just our homes, but our cars, boats and trailers are still here and they're safe. We are so blessed here, with fresh air and water. It's so good in these parts that I often wonder why we are blessed like this? Whatever the reason, I am thankful, and I pray that you are also. Remember to always have an attitude of gratitude and be thankful for every blessing in life, including this brand new day, even if it is a little wet. Be thankful that you are here and not in San Francisco, where they are getting rained on in epic proportions. Thank you Lord for your love of Western New York, and for the grace you deliver to us daily. Our song to kick off this soggy new work week is "Another Time Another Place," a duet with Sandi Patty and Wayne Watson. A great song for every day of our lives, give it a few minutes.
