

Wednesday, October 27, 2021

Hello, and happy Wednesday to you. I just looked outside and something must be wrong, it doesn't seem to be raining. When was the last day that we didn't have any rain? We can use a respite from it, we are well over our October average. If you grew up in these parts, then you know that it will most likely rain on Halloween, so we know that it is returning. Over the years as a trick-or-treater, or the parent of them, there are only two things that I can remember concerning Halloween weather, rain or snow, or a combination of them. Yes, we have rain, but we also have a good amount of fresh water to enjoy. Take a look at the color of your lawn today, it's as green as it has ever been. When things look bad, there is still good to be found, and where there is good, there is God. There are still flowers blooming out there, how nice is that? In the face of anything unsettling, there is always hope, always joy to be found if you keep looking for it. If you concentrate solely on the trouble, that is all that you will find. I'm going to look for the hand of God in things today, and then try to do that every day. We find our joy in life when we find the Lord in our life. If you haven't seen Him today, keep looking, He is there. Our song for this western Wednesday is "For the Good Times" by Ray Price. A sad country song, but a classic, find the beauty in it today. Peace!