Great Friday morning everyone. Those were two nearly perfect days on Wednesday and Thursday, but it looks like normal is returning, and with it, days of more precipitation. Prayerfully it will be rain and not that other four-letter-word . . . snow. As the temperatures continue to drop, the chance for snow increases, and I'm really hoping that we won't see any until Christmas Eve. Even then I'd only like to see about an inch, just enough to highlight the luminaries on Old Falls Blvd. that evening. I got way ahead of myself there, so let's get back to the final Friday in October, and schools will be loaded with students dressed for Halloween today, so drive careful. I'll be spending my morning with Cindy at Millard Fillmore Suburban Hospital as she is scheduled for Achilles tendon surgery. This is the second surgery for her, having the same surgery on the opposite leg a few years ago. We would greatly appreciate any prayers for her today. And please pray for anyone you know that is hospitalized, or who is battling illness or disease of any kind. After close to two years of prayers for covid-19, we've returned to the reality that cancer has not left us, but is still reeking havoc with many friends and family members. Please lift them to God's throne of grace that He might grant them healing and comfort and peace. I ask the same for all of you. Our song for this Friday is a favorite of my patient, so here is John Elefante singing "That's Why God Made the Moon." God's love to everyone.
