Morning has arrived, and the sun will be showing up eventually. It looks to be a beautiful day in store for us on this marvelous Monday. Yesterday was great too, except from 1:00 - 4:00 PM. Then the horrible spectacle we saw on our televisions was nauseating. But I'm doing my best not to focus on the embarrassing situation that unfolded in Jacksonville. Let's turn our attention to today, and what is possible in God's Earthly kingdom. Well, to start with, we are awake, which means that we are alive, and that's a good thing. It is cold out there right now because the clouds that offer thermal blanketing are absent. That will translate into another day of clear, blue skies. I'll take it. We all should celebrate this weather because we all know what is on the horizon, and it will arrive whether we want it to or not. I say not! Western New York is truly God's country, and every time I consider moving somewhere with a warmer Winter, I'm reminded of everything that He provides for us right here, and I stop considering any other place. This is a wonderful area to live in, and everything we need to sustain a good life can be found here, without wildfires, mudslides, tornadoes, earthquakes, insect swarms, poisonous snakes, and other things that we don't want here. Yes indeed, I'll take a snowstorm anytime over these other things, the snow will melt, and all will be right with the world again. Thank You Lord for giving us such a terrific place to live and raise our families. As Veteran's Day is observed this week, I'll be playing songs to honor our Vets and others who are currently serving. This song by Tim McGraw was sung at St. Paul by my niece Jamie yesterday. She is also a Navy Veteran and she wanted to help honor others who served, and she did a great job. So here is the man who made the song famous singing "If You're Reading This." Be still and know that He is God.
