Tuesday morning is here, and so are you. In fact we're all here together today. The best part of any new day is the potential that it has for strengthening old and developing new friendships and relationships. More than that, it gives us another opportunity to strengthen our relationships with God. Earthly friendships are wonderful, yet they pale in comparison to a relationship with the Lord Who promises those who believe in His Son Jesus with eternal life. That seems like a lot to do on a Tuesday, but it's really not, God is always ready and waiting for us to come to Him in prayer. He requests it, He loves it. So, what are we waiting for, after you listen to today's song, go spend some time with your Creator God and Father. Let Him know that you are thankful for His gifts, let Him know that you are sorry for your sins, and let Him know that you need Him and His Son to move forward in faith toward the Heavenly future that they have prepared for you. As I promised yesterday, because Veteran's Day occurs this week, I'll be posting songs that remind us of the sacrifices that members of our military make for us and for the precious freedoms that we live under. Today's song is called "Letters From Home" by John Michael Montgomery. Thank you for your service.
