A Blessed morning to you! It would be even nicer without the rain that's currently falling. I'm of the mind that we've had enough rain for awhile. If you used the past two days to set up your outdoor Christmas decorations, then you made a good choice. Who knows if we'll be seeing anything like that for a few months. It's nothing to be too concerned with. Often, we get worked up over things that we have no control over. If we have no control, give it to God, He has the ultimate control over everything, and stop worrying about it. The past few weeks took a more serious tone with the loss of loved ones for many friends, and the new diagnoses of cancer in several people. The prayer list is long and growing. I saw a friend from that cancer prayer list at Just Say Cheesecake on Thursday, and my best words for her were, "I'll keep praying." Please do that for every one you know suffering in any way. And take a moment to smile and laugh today, even in the face of trouble. Remember, God didn't just give you a face for frowns, but He gave us a funny bone, use it today. Our song for this secular Saturday is not serious one, in fact it's short and fun. Here is Peter Noone and Herman's Hermits singing "Henry the VII, I Am" on the Ed Sullivan Show. Enjoy!
