Good Monday morning. I'm running a little behind today, and I'm not that disappointed as I was able to get a couple extra hours of sleep last night. I can use that additional sleep today. Any time that we get to sleep in is a good thing for our health, and today is good for me. I slept much better than I did after last Sunday's game and that's a fact. It's strange how a Bills' win changes our attitudes and even allows us to sleep more peacefully. It's a game, and it shouldn't be that important, but it seems to be. When you stop and measure the importance of a game in our lives, it is evident that it really isn't. Sometimes we don't spend our time worrying about what should be the most important things in life, like faith, family, and friendship. Would we ever trade these things for a Bills' win? I pray that we haven't gone that far. It would be far better to turn our lives over to the Lord and allow Him to guide us on a path that provides us every spiritual blessing, including the great final blessing of life eternal and everlasting. Our song for this Marvelous Monday morning is "I Surrender All" by Clay Crosse.
