A great good morning to everyone. Praying that this would be a terrific Tuesday for you as well. It's quiet beginnings are welcome, all I can hear is a distant train horn, probably along River Rd. This is a sign that even in the quiet of the early morning, life has already started to take shape somewhere. Other than that horn, it is extremely silent. The loudest sound in our home right now are the key strokes on the computer. When I stop typing, it is a peaceful silence, but I know that it will end eventually. It reminds me of Jesus trying to find a place to rest, alone with His own thoughts, but the crowds keep following Him. He always helped them, even if that meant giving up on His own desire to be alone and silent. There are days like that for all of us, we would like to be still, be quiet, be in prayer, but the world needs us for something else. We are called to fill those needs too, to be a blessing to others who need our time and attention. Don't look at it as an interruption, see it instead as an opportunity, an opportunity to serve the world as Jesus did, to do the work that He came to do. Our song this morning is from the same artist who gave us a great song yesterday, Cory Asbury. Today he is performing "The Father's House." Be lifted up today, lift someone with you.
